The Internet has radically transformed our lives for the better. A multitude of users around the world communicate with each other in a safe, secure, and open environment. It has enabled unprecedented productivity, innovation, and improvement in all spheres of life. It is essential for communication, education, health, and for the advancement of global prosperity, with 5 billion users worldwide. However, the Internet is not perfect. What makes it great also makes it vulnerable. With its open nature and globally unmanaged structure, it is the responsibility of all stakeholders to ensure its continued health so that it can continue to serve everyone.
