...across 35 countries.

11 new organizations joined us this year.

Together, we've achieved great things...

We've created new Internet Exchange Points.

We've expanded Internet access and improved connectivity.

We've reduced global routing incidents and defended encryption.

"Self-determination means a lot of different things. Access to the Internet allows us the freedom to find the solutions we need to ensure a prosperous and just future for our people. The community network project is very important to helping us achieve our goal of total independence. We're not only thrilled about the network, but that we had a team of experts supporting us all the way."

Brandon Makaawaawa,
Deputy Head of State, Nation of Hawaii

With your continued support...

We'll advocate for an open and transparent Internet.

We'll increase the adoption of end-to-end encryption.

We'll keep building expertise and capacity.

"We partnered with Internet Society a year and a half ago. We, at Cibervoluntarios, consider that we should not only know everything that is being done, in-depth, but we also want to play an active part in the commitment to promote and defend a more egalitarian Internet – which respects the rights, security and privacy of all, and is a tool and a lever that nurtures citizenship."

Yolanda Rueda Fernández,
President, Cibervoluntarios
